Welcome to this year’s Revelation Perth International Film Festival. As you can see we’ve grown again, taking on daily screenings at the SX in Fremantle, as well as the Paradiso and, of course, Luna. This means there will be more opportunity for people to see our films. As ever the program dances through some of the most exciting indie, genre, and cult movies, cutting-edge documentaries and world cinema. Looking for themes or particular focuses can be both a retrospective and curatorial process. This year there are numerous literary adaptations, including Joe, Wetlands and The Congress. Simultaneously we have films about all manner of unique outsiders such as Finding Vivian Maier, The Man Whose Mind Exploded and Freeload. There are other themes too, works that emphasise performance, unique geographies, that explore alternate forms of living. As the industry becomes entirely digital we also have an analogue sidebar and, throughout the programme, several short films originally shot on super-8 (as well as Revel 8) to keep exploring the idea of cinema culture. So grab a festival pass and come to the movies.

Jack Sargeant
Program Director

It’s with enormous pleasure that we are here presenting the 17th edition of the Revelation Perth International Film Festival! As always, we’ve scoured the globe for the finest offerings of international independent cinema for Western Australian audiences. For the first time we’ve introduced a selection panel made up of industry professionals from Western Australia and beyond who have spent many hours viewing the 500 plus entries we’ve received from the four corners of the planet. It’s always an intense and intensely enjoyable experience and even more worthwhile when they can present to you the fruits of their labour across all forms and all durations.

For their services the event deeply thanks them. The selections include a marked number of Australian and world premieres that make Revelation one of the most unique events on the national film calendar.

We also welcome our national and international guests who join us in passionate discussion and debate on all things film. Every film is a surprise and every turn is a new perspective on the world of contemporary cinema and art. See you in the dark!

Richard Sowada
Revelation Chairman

This is my second year as patron of Perth’s wonderful Revelation Perth International Film Festival, “Rev”, as it’s affectionately called, brings together some of the world’s most exciting, ground-breaking cinema. Innovative, experimental, cutting-edge and engaging feature films and documentaries from some of the most talented and creative filmmakers from around the world are what we have come to expect from this festival, and 2014 promises all this and more. This year the number of submissions to the festival rose by 30% from both local and international filmmakers placing Rev at the forefront of the world’s best film showcases.

In addition the WA Screen Awards will take place at the Heath Ledger Theatre to recognise the depth of talent in our filmmaking community.

The Iranians are coming! After sell-out sessions last year the Perth International Film Festival has extended their program and return to Rev screens for another year. Book early for this!

I have such great memories of being at Rev last year. One of the highlights among many was having the opportunity to meet and talk to an American couple who have made an amazing doco/drama called Burn. This unique and gut-wrenching film takes us into the world of the Detroit Fire Brigade who nightly fight fires lit by arsonists intent on burning this once proud but now crippled city to the ground.

This is only one of the memories I have of my first year at Rev. If you love great cinema as I do, then I urge you to join the thousands who will descend on Rev for a truly memorable experience. See you in the stalls!

PROUD SUPPORTER OF THE REVELATION PERTH INTERNATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL
In Under The Skin Scarlett Johansson plays Laura – an alien who has taken on the form of a beautiful woman in order to lure men to their deaths with the promise of sex.

Adapted from the book of the same name by Michael Faber, the film stunned audiences when it screened at Venice Film Festival in 2013.

Many of the scenes where Johansson's character picks up men were unscripted conversations with non-actors, filmed with hidden cameras.

Director Jonathan Glazer, whose previous feature credits include the excellent Sexy Beast and Birth, crafts a visually stunning science fiction film that, as the movie progresses, transforms Scotland into an alien world. Complete with a haunting soundtrack by Mica Levi, Under the Skin is a remarkable, bold and sensuous science fiction movie that examines gender, sexuality and what it means to be human.

“Visually stunning and deeply disturbing: very freaky, very scary and very erotic.”

PETER BRADSHAW, THE GUARDIAN

“Scarlett Johansson gives the performance of her career.”

Get Your Shorts On! is back with another fresh and exciting line up of short films guaranteed to delight audiences and showcase the talents of WA’s emerging filmmakers.

Get Your Shorts On! films have received funding support from ScreenWest, Lotterywest and/or the Film & Television Institute (FTI).
For over two decades, one of the most exciting national cinemas has been that of Iran and last year its WA debut proved to be one of Revelation’s most popular events. IFFA returns in 2014 with an extended program that showcases the strength and quality of films from this otherwise troubled country.

PARVIZ (PARVIZ)
DIR: MAJID BARZEGAR (2012/107MINS)
Parviz is fifty years old and something of an outsider. He still lives at home with his father, although the two do not get on, but the community relies on him in many small ways. When he loses his job and his father decides to remarry, he has to move away and is rejected by the community. His whole life seems to have unraveled. That is until he decides to take revenge in completely unexpected ways… A fine example of a very new kind of Iranian cinema from director, Majid Barzegar (Rainy Seasons). Received the Rotterdam 2013, New Directors Award and Special Mention, San Sebastian 2013.

HUSH, GIRLS DON’T SCREAM (DOKHTARHA FARYAD NEMIZANAND)
DIR: POURAN DERAKSHANDEH (2012/106MINS)
Shirin is getting ready to be married in a few hours, but she unexpectedly murders a man. The cause of the crime, rooted in her nightmarish childhood, unravels gradually till the real question emerges: Who is the real criminal? Veteran feminist filmmaker Pouran Derakshandeh takes on the contentious subject of paedophilia, a difficult topic anywhere and a first for Iranian cinema. The film won the Audience Award at Fajr (Iran) and has been warmly received at many international festivals.

DOWNPOUR (RAGBAR)
DIR: BAHRAM BEYZA’I (1972/128MINS)
Mr. Hekmati is appointed as a teacher in the poor south of Tehran. He falls in love with the older sister of one of the boys but she has already been promised to the local butcher. In this remarkable debut feature imbued with both comedy and pathos, major pre- and post-revolutionary director, Bahram Beyza’, creates a powerful sense of a closed community still ruled by tradition. The film has been superbly restored with the support of Martin Scorsese’s World Cinema Foundation. It was carried out by Fondazione Cineteca di Bologna at L’Immagine Ritrovata laboratory in 2011. Funding provided by Doha Film Institute.

RHINO SEASON (FASLE KARGADAN)
DIR: BAHMAN GHOBADI (2012/90MINS)
Based on a true story, Rhino Season follows Sahel, a Kurdish-Iranian poet who was unjustly incarcerated during the Islamic Revolution. On release three decades later, Sahel searches for the wife from whom he was separated. A tragic romance set in a political context, strikingly told with an impressionistic, dreamlike blending of past and present. Stars the legendary Iranian actor Behrouz Vossoughi, along with Monica Bellucci and Yilmaz Erdogan (Once upon a Time in Anatolia). The stunning cinematography won an APSA award for Touraj Aslani. The stellar cast includes the famous Iranian expatriate Behrouz Vossoughi, Monica Bellucci and Yilmaz Erdogan. Winner of IFFA Audience Award 2013.

Revelation is very excited to present an extraordinary special event; Sight / Unseen, part of an ongoing series of multi-media collaborations between husband and wife team; the acclaimed artist and filmmaker Leah Singer and Sonic Youth co-founder the legendary guitarist Lee Ranaldo. Working together since the early 1990s, the couple’s collaborations combine projected images and live music, the performance and visuals exploring the ways in which sound and image interact. With a unique staging, this event breaks down many of the established distinctions between the visuals, performer and the audience, creating a show that continually adapts and changes to the situation, creating a unique work and audience experience.

Lee Ranaldo helped redefine music with Sonic Youth, the legendary NYC band he co-founded in 1981. Alongside fellow Sonic Youth guitarist Thurston Moore, Lee Ranaldo shares the #1 spot in Spin’s 100 Greatest Guitarists of All Time.

Leah Singer’s work has been exhibited at numerous international institutions, including the Pompidou, Paris, the Museum of Contemporary Art, Los Angeles and MACBA, Barcelona, amongst others.

Leah Singer and Lee Ranaldo have performed together across the world, at Nuit Blanche in Toronto, the Rotterdam Film Festival, the Power Station of Art, Shanghai, Cote Court Festival in Paris, Contour Festival, ATP, UK, and arte.mov Belo Horizonte, amongst others.
This year at Revelation we celebrate the pure joy of analogue culture! From the legendary Mu-Meson Archives 16mm film program through to the thrill of watching Vladmaster reels, and of course the pleasure of 8-track tapes.

For those unfamiliar with the medium, 8-track tapes provided soundtracks to many road trips and were the format of choice for many throughout the sixties and seventies. Abandoned as a commercial medium by the end of the eighties, in part due to the popularity of cassettes and the launch of CDs, the 8-track found a new lease of life amongst visionary collectors. These ‘trackers’ understood instinctively that 8-tracks were an essential and unique format and that, rather than being a forgotten media, they offer good music, often cheaply thanks to their availability at thrift stores.

Twenty-years ago filmmaker and fanzine editor Russ Forster and fellow enthusiast Dan Sutherland hit the road, undertaking a 10,000 mile journey to explore the 8-track underground. Interviewing collectors, fans, enthusiasts, fanzine writers and musicians – including the legendary Gumball – all dedicated to 8-track tape. The ensuing film – So Wrong, They’re Right is a righteous celebration of music, of 8-track, and of a community of people who believe in the joy of 8-track.

AMERICAN MUMMY 3D

Somewhere, far off the beaten track, way out in the desert of the American southwest, a group of archaeology students and their professor have unearthed a mysterious ancient burial ground. Inside a cave they have found a strange mummified figure. But have they done more than stumble upon the archaeological revelation of the century?

Shot in 3D American Mummy plays as a classic indie horror movie. Cult-director and co-script-writer Charles Pinion has production credits that stretch back to the skate punk splatter underground hit Twisted Issues, the cult hallucinogenic sci-fi horror We Await and the transgressive feature Red Spirit Lake, and American Mummy is a fine addition to his resume.

Pinion’s work has been praised by Frank Henenlotter (Basket Case) and there’s a similar sensibility at play. American Mummy is Pinion’s first film in more than a decade and boasts everything you would expect: splattery gore, an ancient evil and off-beat spins on genre-convention.

COLD IN JULY

When Richard Dane (Michael C Hall from Six Feet Under and Dexter) kills a burglar the local police inform him that he’s killed a wanted, dangerous man. It appears to be an open-and-shut case and Dane returns to his daily life. But then he meets the dead man’s father, the angry, vengeful Ben Russell (the always excellent Sam Shepard), and things really start sliding out of control.

Based on the novel by cult author Joe R Lansdale, Cold In July is a rare thriller that throws the audience deep into contemporary film noir movie set in rural Texas. With a cast that includes an excellent turn from Don Johnson, as well as Hall and Shepard, multi award winning director Jim Mickle (whose credits include We Are What We Are and Stake Land) turns in a powerful crime drama that will keep audiences on the edge of their seats till the final credits roll.

Favourably compared to the likes of John Carpenter and Walter Hill, Jim Mickle’s film is the kind of powerful movie that echoes the auteur thrillers of the seventies and eighties and firmly positions Mickle as a filmmaker to watch.

“Mickle is the new Carpenter, and if you’re into that kind of thing and haven’t heard about him, you soon will.”

THE CONGRESS

Ari Folman, award winning director of Waltz With Bashir, returns with the epic psychedelic science fiction film The Congress. Part animated and part live action, The Congress is based on The Futurological Congress novel by Stanislaw Lem – whose novel Solaris was filmed by Andrei Tarkovsky and became one of the most famous science fiction movies ever made.

_The Congress_ follows actress Robin Wright playing herself, who, faced with a dwindling acting career, elects to give up her actress self to the studio. The studio then scan every inch of her body and every expression she can muster, so that she can live forever in whatever movies they choose to make. All she has to do is give up her identity as an actress. But times change and all decisions have ramifications.

What follows is the kind of mind-bending speculative science fiction that opens up endless utopian possibilities and limitless dystopian nightmares. With a visually stunning and deeply psychedelic palette _The Congress_ explores virtual reality, transforming-chemistry, the collapse of identity, copyright, the function of performance, the hallucinatory nature of reality and the deconstruction of time itself. In _The Congress_ Folman has created a visually stunning, profound movie.

With a cast that includes Harvey Keitel and Paul Giamatti, this is an exceptional work.

CONCRETE NIGHT

Following two brothers raised in a Helsinki slum, Concrete Night explores their shifting relationship with each other, their mother and the world around them. Stumbling through industrial ruins, run down apartments and city streets, the elder brother Ikko is facing a jail sentence, while fourteen-year-old Simo seems adrift in the world. With his elder brother’s advice echoing in his ears and a distant mother, Simo’s world is a dark place.

Winning awards for cinematography, editing, sound design, art direction and direction, Concrete Night recalls the stylistic black and white visuals of Rumble Fish and the visceral street style energy of La Haine, multi-award winning director Pirjo Honkasalo has won awards for many of her previous works from festivals including Venice Film Festival and Locarno, as well as a FIPRESCI award from Thessaloniki.

A stunning feature film debut from writer/director Jason Sweeney, The Dead Speak Back is a powerful raw, perhaps even primal, journey into the experiences of the recently deceased and those left behind. Imagining the period after death as a transient moment in which the newly departed, in this case a youth, speak to both the void and those left behind. While the young man talks, his grieving mother is haunted by his presence in the space he has left in the world around her and in her dreams. The dance of reality and fantasy, and the movements of life and death play back and forth in this film that crafts a genuine surrealism that is both dreamlike and occasionally unnerving.

In The Dead Speak Back, Sweeney creates a world in which sound, movement and gestures are as loud, maybe even louder, than words. Connections even with the haunted dance of memory, however brief, are all that remains. This is the kind of film made far too rarely in Australia, The Dead Speak Back is a haunting, beautiful and deeply affecting work that should stay with audiences long after the lights have been turned back on. More than this, it is a powerful testament to genuine Australian art cinema. Something that should be embraced and, given the high calibre of this work, encouraged.
In a small southern town, fifteen-year-old Gary is looking for work to support his family. Trying to avoid his violent and abusive alcoholic father, he slowly forms a friendship with Joe, the local agricultural employer—an ex-con with a chequered past whose personal demons are continually threatening him. As the harrowing southern gothic narrative develops and events start to escalate, slowly spiralling out of control, what happens may offer all a chance of redemption or ruin.

Directed by David Gordon Green (whose credits include direction on the pitch-perfect George Washington and producer credits on Revelation favourite Shotgun Stories) this film is a gritty and dark tale that is driven by both its atmosphere and powerful characters and marks a return to his southern roots for the director. The cast offer standout performances with Tye Sheridan winning an acting award at Venice for his portrayal of Gary, while Nicolas Cage’s Joe is a brooding, powerful turn that plays to the actor’s undoubted strengths.

Adapted from the classic novel by hardboiled southern author Larry Brown, whose literary style has been compared to the likes of Cormac McCarthy, Harry Crews, William Faulkner and Charles Bukowski, Green is faithful to the strength and vision of Brown’s writing, while simultaneously allowing his own signature strengths to play throughout the movie.
Holloman is a misfit and loner who can see little point to his life and is an inch away from suicide, while Lawrence is a successful salesman, all high-fives and smiles and bluff machismo, with a beautiful fiancée and perfect life. Following a chance meeting it becomes apparent that nothing will ever be the same again. But this not The Odd Couple nor any other buddy movies you have seen. Lawrence and Holloman soon derail all expectations, instead of the standard male friendship comedy, first-time feature director Matthew Kowalchuk subverts the genre and turns in a joyous and smart black humoured comedy which benefits from an additional dose of slapstick and a rapid paced, almost sketch style, velocity and a sense of absurdity.

Based on the play by award winning playwright Morris Panych, Kowalchuk’s film is a broadly subversive comedy that truly delivers, playing in part as a critique of cultural expectations of material success, as a satire of self-actualised air-punching optimism and the over-indulgence misery of self-pity.

“The situations the men find themselves in are absurd and gross, but as they rage and debate on the meaning of life and death something remarkable happens amidst the chaos. The story starts to resonate in your heart and when the dust settles this richly dark film may very well force you re-examine your perspective.”

LAWRENCE AND HOLLOMAN

A road movie with a difference, Locke follows the titular protagonist as, in real time, he makes his way through the late night British countryside. Linked to the outside world through his mobile phone, with each call the certainties of his life start to unravel, unwind and collapse.

Writer/director Steven Knight, whose previous writing credits include Eastern Promises and Dirty Pretty Things and who directed Redemption in 2013, has created a contemporary masterpiece. Brilliantly acted by Tom Hardy (Inception, Lawless) Locke is a movie that excels in the raw power of true storytelling.

Beautifully shot by Haris Zambarloukos, the visual depth is exceptional. Most importantly, the entire increasingly tense narrative is utterly believable and all located within the car.

“This is a masterclass in how the most local, most hemmed-in stories can reverberate with the power of big, universal themes.”

TIME OUT

“An exceptional one-man show for Tom Hardy, this ingeniously executed study in cinematic minimalism has depth, beauty and poise.”

Based on James Franco's 2010 collection of linked short stories, Gia Coppola's debut movie features a great ensemble cast that includes James Franco, Emma Roberts, Val Kilmer and his son Jack, Nat Wolff, Kegan Allen and Chris Messina. Drawing on a handful of Franco’s short stories focusing on a group of teens living in the small Californian town of Palo Alto, the film is tightly directed by Coppola who draws naturalistic performances from her very able and predominantly youthful cast as the protagonists deal with alienation, frustration and boredom through parties, flirtations and nihilism.

With Coppola adapting Franco’s book, the script remains concise throughout, and there’s a believable quality to the often emotionally lost and aimless youths in the film, which avoids foregrounding any ‘issues’ or offering any ‘moralising’ in favour of a more observational approach.

One of the best horror movies ever made, The Texas Chain Saw Massacre helped to re-imagine the American horror film, transforming the genre into something far darker, finding a horror not attacking from outside but from deep within. With its tale of a group of friends stumbling into a family of hellish cannibals, The Texas Chain Saw Massacre laid a template for many films to come and it still packs the knockout punch that so many contemporary horror movies sadly lack. The final twenty-minutes remain some of the most nightmarish committed to celluloid. And are all the better for it.

Over the years Hooper’s movie has been banned and reviled even as it was celebrated and awarded. There can’t be many movies that have been acquired by the Museum of Modern Art and played at drive-ins, been invited to Cannes and banned on video. The Texas Chain Saw Massacre is a crimson bloodied smear of low-budget rural darkness that rightly became a legendary movie. Now forty-years later, and fully restored, it’s time to re-experience this groundbreaking movie on the big screen.
When their neighbour vanishes, three twenty-something roommates, Callie (Daniella Panabaker), Finn (Matt O’Leary) and Jasper (George Finn), enter his apartment. Inside they find dozens of photos of themselves taped to the walls. But this is not the home of a peeping tom, and the trio rapidly discover that the strange neighbour had invented a mysterious machine that takes pictures 24 hours into the future. What they decide to do with the images and the future that they reveal becomes increasingly dangerous as the ramifications of their knowledge and their actions rapidly escalate, spiralling out of control.

With its ensemble cast and tightly constructed narrative, Time Lapse offers a claustrophobic study of a variety of forms of human selfishness and greed. In part, a narrative playing out like a cross between the work of Philip K Dick and Stephen King, this is an original genre work. Writer and first-time feature director Bradley King has delivered a unique film, while the cast deliver calm performances that help to build up the increasingly uncanny atmosphere.

It is the early sixties and in remote Patagonia, an Argentinean family are travelling across the desert heading to a small community where they hope to open a hotel. A lone German doctor asks if he can follow them on the dangerous highway. As the film develops, the doctor slowly worms his way into their lives, first taking a room in their guesthouse, then taking their young daughter into his medical care. What follows is a compelling, deeply haunting portrait of a family who are unwittingly harboring an internationally wanted man, an exceptionally dangerous criminal & an oblique examination of the history of South America.

Drawing on her own historical novel, director Lucia Puenzo - known for the multi-award winning XXY - has created a powerful & unnerving drama. The cast turn in excellent performances, especially first time feature actress Florencia Bado, while Alex Brendemuhl is haunting as the obsessive doctor.

Screened as part of the Official Selection Un Certain Regard Festival De Cannes, Wakolda won multiple awards from the Argentinean Academy, including for best film & best director.
Based on the international cult bestseller by Charlotte Roche, Wetlands tells the story of Helen, a hospitalised young woman with a particular obsessive fascination with sex, her bodily excretions, a wider interest in dirt and filth, and a love of avocados. The book was compared by Granta to both The Catcher In The Rye and The Female Eunuch and was translated into 27 languages.

Described by BuzzFeed as "the most WTF, NSFW movie at this year’s Sundance Film Festival" Wetlands is by turns sexually explicit, painfully funny, emotionally evocative and absurdly exaggerated. This adaptation manages to be simultaneously realistic yet fantastic, empathic and shocking, smart and ‘gross’, effectively embracing the contradictions of its central protagonist and common cultural attitudes towards women and the female body. With its cast turning in joyous performances that truly engage with the source material, Wetlands is one of the best cinematic renditions of a popular book for many years.

Directed by multi-award winner David Wnendt, this film has the same frenetic hyper-real energy as other adaptations of contemporary cult novels – think Trainspotting and Fight Club – and like these now-classic movies it plays for keeps. Love it or hate it, like the novel from which it is adapted Wetlands will be talked about for many years.

Kelly has tagged along with her boyfriend Jim on a road trip to bigfoot country. He plans to make a documentary about the legendary creature, and where better to begin than the town of Willow Creek? The town is only a short distance from where the legendary Patterson and Gimlin film was shot in '67 (look it up online, you've all seen it!). What follows is a found footage film that breathes new life into the form thanks to its use of real bigfoot locations and its careful nods to the various bigfoot legends. This layer of cryptozoological authenticity adds to the fun, and later fear, that the movie creates.

Bobcat Goldthwait's horror debut is a sharp and savvy monster movie, it creates an increasingly nervous and jittery atmosphere that at the very least will make audiences think twice before camping in infamous woods...

“An unlikely but effective found-footage horror from Goldthwait.”

ANTARCTICA: A YEAR ON ICE

A landmass twice the size of Australia and with a summer population of approximately 5000 people, the snow covered landscape is to most of us an utterly alien world. Filmmaker Anthony Powell works in Antarctica, not just in the summer but in the winter too - when the sun sets for two months and the already tiny population dwindles to a mere handful. This hardcore group spend days snowed in while 200mph gales batter their buildings in the bitterly cold darkness and – when the skies are clear - the luminous Aurora Australis glows vividly in the sky.

Turning his camera on the people who live and work together in these remote bases, Powell does not follow the scientists but focuses instead on the everyday workers who keep the community running. First time feature director Powell paints a vivid picture of life on the continent told from the perspective of the maintenance crews, warehouse workers, fire crews and shop workers. Utterly fascinating and uniquely personal, this is Antarctica as you have never seen it before, a vast wilderness that a dedicated few call home all year round.

A visually stunning and unique first person documentary that positions the viewer deep in the rugged beauty of the continent, Antarctica: A Year On Ice has won numerous awards and it is easy to see why.

AMERICAN ARAB

Filmmaker Usama Alshaibi was born in Baghdad in 1969 and grew up in the USA and Middle East. As a young man he made numerous underground and experimental films and was a lively member of the Chicago filmmaking community, working as both a film director and festival programmer.

Now, in American Arab the director turns the camera on himself and those around him and starts to explore exactly what it means to be an American Arab in the 21st century; examining the relationships between nationality, culture, self-expression, creativity and personal identity, and the prejudices and stereotypes that can shape these experiences. Drawing on both his own experiences and on those of others, Alshaibi paints a complex picture of contemporary identities.

Usama Alshaibi’s previous documentary feature was the acclaimed Nice Bombs, which was broadcast on the Sundance Channel in 2008. With American Arab he has firmly combined the personal aspects of independent cinema with the wider concerns of documentary cinema to create an engaging exploration of identity.
EVOLUTION OF A CRIMINAL

Seven-years in the making, Darius Clark Monroe’s Evolution of a Criminal follows the filmmaker as he returns home a decade after robbing a bank; a man returning to examine actions undertaken as a teenager. The film unfolds through the voices of heartbroken family members, friends, teachers and others – voices of those who are hurt and torn by the actions of a loved one, as well as the voices of those who were the victims and those who prosecuted the legal case.

With the interviewees talking to Darius, these conversations are exceptionally revealing. The interviews are deftly intercut with almost dreamlike recreations that serve to emphasis the actual crime for the audience. Evocatively shot, Evolution of a Criminal maintains a gritty light quality and visual energy throughout, which gives the film something of a personal, almost poetic quality, that marks it as unique.

Premiering to critical acclaim at this year’s SXSW, Evolution of a Criminal is a powerful documentary. With Spike Lee on board as executive producer, it’s clear that Monroe is a major talent in the making.

“All too often, many of us look at individuals who commit crimes as “the other”, people about whom we make snap judgments and for whom we have little sympathy. What Monroe is able to achieve with this film, in part, is to demonstrate that holding so narrow a view does a disservice to us all, and it discounts the reality that time and pressure can lead any of us to a bad decision – and that that same combination of elements can also reveal a diamond.”

A unique documentary. Irving Gregory, co-writer and cast member, will be in attendance at Revelation.

Shot in 3D Charlie Victor Romeo, aka cockpit voice recorder, draws upon a series of black box recordings to re-create six genuine airline emergencies. Originally a multi-award winning 1999 downtown NYC theatrical production that counted pilots and US Air Force among its audience, this film adaptation has garnered equal praise, screening at Sundance (2013) and Copenhagen International Documentary Festival (2013) amongst others.

This drama-documentary film offers an absorbing study of how pilots and airline crews operate in emergency situations, as well as the kind of emergencies that can arise. What follows is an always tense and utterly fascinating vision of what happens on the flight deck when things start to go wrong. But the film eschews exploitation, this is not a disaster movie, but a film about how highly trained people work in an emergency (comparisons could be made to surgeons or fire fighters, who equally show calm in the face of emergencies). While the audience may be aware that the very presence of these recordings does not bode well, the film does not dwell on death but on human interaction and the skills of the people who keep planes in the air.

FAITH CONNECTIONS

The Kumbh Mela, the largest gathering of people on Earth, is held every twelve years over 55 days. The festival sees approximately 100 million Hindus gather at the confluence of three rivers – the Ganges, Yamuna and mythical Saraswati – to celebrate their faith and bathe in the waters, enabling a spiritual cleansing that frees people from the cycle of rebirth.

Asked to attend by his father the filmmaker Pan Nalin travels to the Kumbh Mela with his camera. What unfolds is fascinating, funny and deeply moving documentary. Tracing atypical stories through the gathered masses, the film follows numerous people amongst the crowds, from the wandering hermit who finds an abandoned child, the Sadhas who sit and smoke ganja while discussing the nature of spirituality and the parents who have lost their child in the massed crowds. Within all of these stories there is a question of faith, of humanity and of the spiritual, all woven together via Nalin’s film.

Independent Indian film director Pan Nalin’s credits includes numerous award winning movies including Samsara, voted Most Popular Feature Film at MIFF in 2002, Ayurveda: Art of Being and Valley of Flowers. Faith Connections is a beautifully realised work that remains with the viewer long after the credits have rolled.

FINDING VIVIAN MAIER

When she died, Chicago nanny Vivian Maier left behind boxes of coats, hats, old clothes and 100,000 photographic negatives. Chanced upon by John Maloof, when he purchased a box of negatives at an auction, and following as he slowly archives the incredible photographs, organises an exhibition of the work and tries to get it recognised by the art world. Meanwhile a far larger mystery needs to be uncovered, and Maloof finds himself wondering about the life of the mysterious photographer and what possessed her to take so many photographs...

A truly remarkable documentary film, Finding Vivian Maier follows Maloof on his voyage of discovery. Examining the role of Vivian’s street photography, shifting cultural and social history and, behind it all, the quiet and mysterious life of a woman who appears to have kept her groundbreaking talents hidden.

HAPPINESS

Peyangki is an eight-year old boy and trainee monk who lives near the village of Laya, two days walk from the nearest road, in rural Bhutan. Located high in the Himalayas, Bhutan is a remote and ancient kingdom, where, in 1999, King Jigme Wangchuck allowed television and the internet into the country, opening up the outside world to the country's inhabitants.

Now, years later, young Peyangki starts thinking about the arrival of electricity and television in his village, dreaming of what it could all mean.

Scored by British Sea Power and beautifully shot by Nina Bernfeld, Happiness won the Cinematography Award in the World Cinema Documentary category at Sundance 2014.

The film opens up the world of rural Bhutan for the audience, making the audience's enthusiasm for seeing the beauty and wonder of this kingdom a parallel for its inhabitant's fascination for television and the world beyond the mountains.

FREELOAD

Freeload examines the secret, hidden subculture of young people, many of whom would probably be considered as dropouts, who have elected to experience life riding the rails. Jumping the trains that criss-cross the USA, these individuals, and small groups of friends, travel on the back of freight trains, hobo style.

Some are living on the road and exploring the potentials for freedom whilst others could be living updates of the classic hobo myths. Freeload explores the possibilities of living on the road, whether as a classic adventure or as a mode of survival, and looks at those who exist at the very margins of society. By turns evocative and confronting, Freeload explores a culture that remains hidden from most people.

A beautiful film that captures voices too rarely heard, and what they say may change the way you think.

“It is hard to imagine any documentarian coming as close to the beating heart of today’s railroad hobo as Director Dan Skaggs and his team have done in Freeload.”

Trevor Laurence and Simeon Hutner’s "Harlem Street Singer" tells the story of legendary musician Reverend Gary Davis, tracing his life from playing the tobacco stations of the rural south through to the streets of Harlem.

Reverend Davis could play them all: gospel, blues, folks and popular ragtime songs, twisting each according to the audience, and giving all his own unique sound. His influence extended to the likes of contemporaries such as Leadbelly and Woody Guthrie, and later to the emergent folk scene of the late-fifties and sixties with musicians such as Pete Seeger, Bob Dylan, Jerry Garcia and many, many other legendary musicians.

With interviewees including Peter Yarrow, Bob Weir, Dave Van Ronk and alongside archival footage, including unseen material from the Newport Folk Festival, "Harlem Street Singer" is an absorbing study of a musician who changed the way in which music was created and influenced his own and subsequent generations.

“A loving biography of a guitarist whose work was „not folk, not blues, not gospel, but drew from and colored those genres and more. ... „Harlem Street Singer” gives some overdue doc attention to the Reverend Gary Davis, whose fingerpicking style influenced a generation or three of white rock musicians and whose songs and arrangements became staples of the 1960s folk revival.”

Aaron Swartz was a remarkable child prodigy; writing code and helping in the development of RSS web feed format while in his teens; involved with the website Reddit; assisted in developing Creative Commons and much more. In many ways his work and, his attitude, are central to the ideas of freedom that informed the development of the internet.

Swartz was also interested in the nature of information and social justice, and involved in internet activism. In 2011 Swartz was arrested and indicted on numerous charges for downloading nearly four million documents from the JSTOR digital library. The young man found himself facing 35 years in prison and a massive fine.

The Internet’s Own Boy tells Aaron’s story. It is a story that is fascinating, troubling and deeply moving. It is the story of an individual who saw the potential inherent in the internet and about freedom of information, about the role of the internet and information in our lives and about contemporary society.

“A moving memorial to Internet whiz kid Aaron Swartz, The Internet’s Own Boy may be the most emotionally devastating movie ever made about hacking and freedom of information.”

With his shaved head, meticulously waxed moustache, tattoos, piercings & make-up Drako Oho Zarhazar appears as a true transgressive bohemian, while his manner, charming & disarmingly honest, is that of a perfect gentleman. In his hometown of Brighton there are stories about him, he was a dancer, he modeled for Salvador Dali & he appeared in films by Derek Jarman. But following two serious & unrelated accidents, Drako was left with a rare form of amnesia that meant recent events, even from the previous day, would be forgotten.

Director Toby Amies spent years getting to know Drako, documenting the ageing bohemian in his small council flat. But this apartment is a marvellous treasure chest in which all that matters or mattered to Drako is placed; from personal mementoes & dozens handwritten notes to seemingly endless pictures of nude men. These transform the apartment into something that is both an extension of Drako’s mind & an installation work of genuine outsider art.

Amies resists temptation to merely dwell on Drako’s biography or his bohemian lifestyle, although both are present, instead he primarily focuses on the Drako who he knows, a man who doesn’t always remember who the director is, but knows that he is a friend and lives by the maxim, “trust absolute unconditional.” What follows is by turns funny, sad and insightful, telling a deeply poignant story about friendships, ageing and memory, and about those magical individuals who exist all around us and whose presence makes the world a colourful and magical place.

OLD MAN

In Old Man, multi-award winning director Dan Schneidkraut focuses primarily on Andrew, his father, but in doing so also explores his own life experiences and the relationship the two-share. With his deadpan narration and keen eye for detail, Dan creates an exceptional film; part essay, part biography, part diary and part psychogeographical tour.

Andrew owns Albums on the Hill the last record store in town, and Old Man takes the audience through a world of long closed record stores, poetry, quiet cinemas, hardcore punk brawls, long forgotten gigs, extended and adopted families, parents, siblings, friends, casual violence and collectable vinyl. This is a world of empty lots, suburban side streets, record collecting, photographs, backrooms, poetry readings, car rides, piles of records, kitchen tables and holes punched in walls.

There are precious few movies that really play like Old Man, in part a trip back to where the filmmaker grew-up and part an ode to lost time, yet simultaneously it is a celebration of lives living and lived. At one point Dan comments about never writing the great American novel, but perhaps - with its intergenerational narratives, almost-picaresque sense of character and evocative sense of space and time Old Man is a cinematic version of the very same impulse.
The tiny house movement has grown over the past decade into something of a phenomena, with people electing to give up a lifetime of mortgage repayments and massive all-mod-cons suburban houses, in search of something simpler and perhaps more authentic.

Directors Christopher Smith and Merete Mueller turn the camera on their attempts to build a tiny house in rural Colorado, while simultaneously exploring the increasing popularity of tiny houses. Building their own house, with no previous construction experience, exploring their own motivations and those of others, Tiny is a movie that explores both what it means to live small and what it means when we think of home.

A fascinating and inspirational documentary that offers genuine possibilities to those seeking an alternative, more environmentally friendly and cheaper existence, Tiny should inspire at least some of the audience to start thinking big about living tiny.

“Though TINY may be ‘a story about living small’, it is also a story about learning to live large – about expanding our concept of what our domestic spaces can do for us, in connecting us to our communities, to nature, to our loved ones, and to our dreams.”

WWW.AUSTINCHRONICLE.COM
George Takei first entered the public imagination playing Sulu in the cult TV series Star Trek, a role reprised in subsequent movies, and which alone would have guaranteed him a significant place in the pop cultural pantheon. But George Takei’s career has extended far beyond the bridge of the legendary star ship Enterprise, taking in numerous popular television shows, films and theatrical productions, as well as regular appearances on Howard Stern’s radio show. He has also garnered millions of online followers thanks to his Facebook posts that move from the wryly humorous to the camp to the political. Perhaps most importantly Takei has become an outspoken activist for same sex marriage and equality.

Director Jennifer M. Kroot, whose previous feature, the excellent It Came From Kuchar, documentary screened at Revelation - has gained exceptional access to Takei’s life, and she follows the actor and his spouse through numerous public appearances and speeches as well as their home life. What emerges through these sequences, and interviews with the Takeis as well as Star Trek cast members (including Leonard Nimoy, Nicholle Nichols, Walter Koenig and a very, perhaps unintentionally, funny William Shatner), alongside family members, friends and activists, is a portrait of a man deeply committed to equality and social justice.

An actor who rose to the top of his profession despite facing discrimination as a Japanese American and a childhood spent in an internment camp during the Second World War. To Be Takei is a genuinely joyous movie, a celebration of pop culture and the importance of standing-up for your beliefs.

“Considering how radically photographer Edward Burtynsky has already transformed the way we view man’s impact on his home planet, one might reasonably ask what the Canadian artist could possibly do to advance his already eco-conscious oeuvre. Turns out the answer couldn’t be simpler: Just add water.”

VARIETY
“It is an abyss that is swallowing my son,” sobs one despairing mother in this absorbing documentary about internet addiction, labelled a clinical disorder by the Chinese government.

Web Junkie takes the audience to a rehabilitation centre where teenage internet addicts are treated by a combination of specialists, therapists, psychologists and drill sergeants. As the film progresses, the nature of internet addiction becomes increasingly apparent, with youths, parents and doctors talking about addicts spending day long stretches playing online, one teenager even confessing to 300 hours of almost non-stop play in fifteen days.

Internet addiction, viewed in these terms, is a serious problem in contemporary China, and this rehabilitation centre represents the official response. But, away from the specialists, the youths also tell their own stories.

Parts of this absorbing fly-on-the-wall documentary play like a Titticut Follies for the web generation, as the movie documents the various aspects of the treatment; the cameras tracking through corridors, dorms, classrooms and offices, following everyone in the institution as they attempt to cure the youths’ addiction.

Thirty years ago Johnny Gosch was abducted while doing his paper route near the family home. The case still remains unsolved. Powerfully mixing archival newsreel footage with contemporary interviews Who Took Johnny follows the boy’s mother Noreen Gosch and her relentless quest to find out what happened to her son. What follows is an utterly absorbing film, as the story unfolds over the ensuing decades, and rumours, conspiracies and evidence emerge with Noreen’s search for answers.

With Who Took Johnny directors Michael Galinski, Suki Hawley and David Beilinson, known to Revelation audiences for the award winning Battle For Brooklyn and Horns and Halos, have created an exceptional documentary. Not just the story of an unsolved crime, but also the story of how the social and cultural response to child protection has changed, but perhaps most importantly it is the story of a mother who never ceased her search. Never less than exceptional, this is a film that once viewed will stay with the audience.

“‘Who Took Johnny’ is both a moving tale of one family destroyed by the loss of a child and yet too strong to ever let this crime go unsolved, and a story of America slowly losing its innocence. Beautifully told by a trio of filmmakers giving as much respect to this story as one could ever possibly hope, this is easily one of the best true crime documentaries to hit screens in quite some time. At all costs, hunt this film down.”
